Wall Street Journal Breakingviews 25 April 2007

Motorola/Icahn: US boardrooms remain clubby places. So there's nothing like the idea of a proxy fight at a poorly performing company to excite investors and corporate governance types alike. But Institutional Shareholder Services (ISS), the influential shareholder advisory firm, has gone too far in recommending Carl Icahn's bid for a seat on Motorola's board. Their recommendation comes close to the bad idea that any dissent is better than none.

The problem is that the quality of Icahn's advice on Motorola has been poor. Just a few weeks ago, he was recommending the technology communications firm buy back up to $15bn worth of stock. This would have left the company in hock. But he changed his mind in mid-April, saying the company should fix its increasingly obvious problems first. There's nothing wrong with changing one's mind - indeed, his new view is smarter. The variability of the company's cash flows means even a seemingly modest amount of debt could lead to a severe cash crunch.

The problem is that Icahn should have realised his plan was a poor idea from the start. And he hasn't proposed any other big ideas to justify why he should receive a seat. Moreover, Motorola's board hasn't shied away from conflict in the past. In 2004, it ejected boss Christopher Galvin, the grandson of the company's founder. Motorola may be troubled, but Icahn does not deserve a seat on the board.

Context News

Institutional Shareholder Services (ISS), the shareholder advisory firm, has recommended Carl Icahn receive a seat on Motorola's board. Icahn holds a 2.9% stake in the technology company.
